Project Title	Ethics of Institutional Beliefs, financed by Polish National Science Centre's program OPUS, PI Adam Dyrda (Department of Legal Theory, Faculty of Law and Administration, Jagiellonian University)
Project description	Popular science description of the project: https://projekty.ncn.gov.pl/opisy/478670-en.pdf Part of the full description of the project concerning the post-doc position: In the experimental part (...) the team would determine the ways folk and professional beliefs in institutional and non-institutional contexts by implementing a comparative design (de Vaus 2013). To acquire an in-depth understanding the experimental design will be worked out (by the socio-empirically oriented team member – i.e. PostDoc) and applied to laypeople and legal professionals (legislators, attorneys, judges) in two legal cultures: civil law and common law. The representative institutional contexts will be i.a. Polish constitutional judiciary institutions – Constitutional Tribunal and higher courts; and the UK or USA constitutional judiciary institutions (higher courts, SCOTUS). The vignette testing abroad will be applied by courtesy of international collaborators (mainly from the USA and the UK). Following a well-established tradition in cognitive psychology and in research on cognitive biases in law in particular (Rachlinski & Wistrich 2017), vignette design will be employed as the main research tool. A vignette study comprises a short description of a hypothetical scenario (eg. the creation and recognition of an institution), in which some factors are experimentally manipulated in order to check for their possible influence over the dependent variable. Typically the between-subjects design (participants are randomly assigned to different groups: laypeople vs professionals) is employed. A single

	group will be presented the same vignette (participants in different groups are presented with different vignettes; Evans et al., 2015). The precise design will follow the standard experimental approach in this field as described in Aguinis & Bradley (2014). Sampling strategy: Professional respondents will be recruited from workshops at professional training institutions, such as the National School of Judiciary and Public Prosecution in Krakow, Poland (and congenial institutions abroad, by courtesy of project collaborators). The survey will be conducted during workshops, thus minimizing unit non-response. Results obtained from the professional sample will be contrasted with the results obtained from samples composed of law students (recruited at the team members' universities) or of lay subjects.
Scope of duties	according to the Work Regulations of the Jagiellonian University Annex 1 to the Work Regulations of the Jagiellonian University – Model scopes of responsibilities and duties of academic teachers Research tasks in the project (general): library queries, analysis, development of the research materials; editing and authoring of academic articles, conference presentations. General focus on social ontology, sociology of institutions and experimental philosophy of law. Postdoc will participate in the implementation of the following research tasks of the project (3-9): <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 3. Development of the typology (or map) of positions in contemporary philosophy (mainly ontology) of social and legal institutions. 4. Analysis and the critical assessment of the functions of socially shared beliefs (as contributing to the existence of various social institutions). 5. Initial assessment of the adequacy of the established typology of contemporary positions in ethics of belief to the analysis of institutional beliefs 6. Development of the characteristics of beliefs that effectively play their performative roles in institutional contexts 7. Analysis of the subject literature dedicated to the realist and anti-realist institutional ontologies 8. Investigating whether the ethical-epistemic characterization of beliefs is identical on anti-realist grounds, including the so-called fictional institutional ontology, and on the basis of realistic ontology inquiries on whether ethical-epistemological characteristics of beliefs are congenial in cases of antirealist (esp. fictionalist) and realist institutional ontology 9. Construction of the criteria to distinguish different categories of cases in which institutional beliefs do not play their performative role (and are false)
